Refugee Students Welcome at Union

by STEVE FLEMING

A strong contingent of McGill students turned out yesterd to welcome 75 Hungarian refugee students at a reception in McGill Union. Despite the trials and tribulations they have countered during the past few weeks, the refugee students seem well at ease and mingled casually with the McGill students.

The Reverend Knowles of the Bursaries Committee, on behalf of Dr. James, McGill University, and other universities across Canada, extended a warm welcome to the Hungarian students. For the past few weeks the refugee students have been staying at the Detention Centre on St. Antoine street. They will remain there until the fall when they will apply for admission to Canadian Universities.

Tour of Campus

Many of the students could not speak English but members of the Hungarian Club acted as interpreters. There was a genuine interest on the part of all the refugee students to learn about Canada in general and McGill University in particular. After the reception in the Ballroom, the students were taken on a guided tour of the campus. Members of the Scarlet Key and the Red Wing Societies acted as hosts.

The opening ceremony of the Hungarian Students Univers Fund will be held tomorrow 11 am. in front of the Arts Bu ing.

Editorial

Public Relations

Among the manifestations of the modern desire to please is the death of the old-fashioned insult. Since the ambition of every young Arts student these days seems to be to become a public relations officer, there has been a steady increase in the use of diplomatic terms and techniques in University life. Anyone who "sounds off' and resorts to old-fashioned earthy abuse instead of using a circumlocuitous approach to achieve the same end is accused of boorishness.

The influence of the public relations, or PR, way of life is being increasingly felt in college. The requirements for a good PR man are a charming smile, a good suit or Ivy league outfit and a copy of "How To Win Friends and Influence People." A briefcase, contents unspecified, also helps. The PR man is everywhere at McGill these days, standing aloof and silent, dignified and staid at the sidelines of official functions, rather like a proud but shy father. This is the quiescent or retiring approach, when the amateur PR man is present at an exhibition he has promoted. The positive or aggressive — not that a good PR man ever gets really aggressive — approach is symbolised by the person who tries to co-opt you on to some committee or other. He lauds your virtues, pats your back, emphasizes the needs of the organisation, needs that only you can fill.

One of the sacred rights of the student, for better or for worse, is his right to do as he damn well pleases. This includes his right to be apathetic if he so choses. At no other time in life is the student so much his own master, for better or for worse. However if the students are to be PRed in their college days, and to meet the amateurs before being brought into the sphere of the professionals, they will have time to build up a resistance to the developing art of PRing which after all is only getting people to do in the last place what they really do not wish to do in the first.

As Others See It

Ideas Go By

WHY? When was the last time you challenged a statement your instructor professor made? Last week, last month or last year. If it is the latter, you are probably one of the easiest students to teach the instructor has. If you sit in your oaken chair absorbing the instructors words and drawings like a sponge as the gospel truth, you probably will lose the knowledge, just as fast when the pressure is put on you. Everyone will agree that no human is perfect. Deductive reasoning from that point leaves us that teachers are human, therefore, they must be wrong once in a while. When the student lets some ideas or statements go by him without question, he is leaving himself open to accepting false and prejudice material.

Carl Sandberg, whose poetry is considered to have contained some wisdom, stated recently, "Much of the history of the world could be written, in a book titled, 'Challengers of Axioms'."

'WHY'

Many times the small three letter word, WHY has caused spectacular events; Einstein, Columbus, and Galileo are just a few of the great people who asked themselves why and delved further to investigate.

You may say to yourself you are not out to discover new worlds. One can find through a richer, fuller life with a complete and better understanding of the things in our environment.

Letter To The Editor

Love, Patience, Understanding

Sir:

As a believer of the United Nations, and as a democratic individual free from any anti-Semitic prejudice—that is to say, I am neither anti-Arab nor anti-Jewish —I feel I am in a position to qualify, very impartially, the articles of Mr. Regenstreif and Mr. Rezek as being inspired by sectarism and intolerance.

Untactful

I do believe it was rather untactful of the United States to invite king Saud to visit the country. What a paradox! The president of one of the greatest democracies in the world playing host to a feudal ruler, possessor of three hundred wives and who uses his country's national revenue to build them palaces while his subjects starve. Is he the true representative of the Arab people—

Doorman Role

In spite of this king Saud was invited. He became official guest of the United States Government. Mayor Wagner's role was merely that doorman and, as such, he was expected to abide by the most elementary rules of courtesy when receiving his nation's guest. Unfortunately, as he admitted last week to the press, he confuses hypocrisy with courtesy and by his attitude he commits one of the sins of which he accused king Saud. It becomes apparent that the Mayor is anti-Arab!

Mutual Destruction?

It is not unreasonable to say that if the antagonism between Arabs and Jews in the Middle East remains at the same level of hat red, the only possible conclusion will be a mutual destruction. There is always the hope, however, that neither Mr. Rezek nor Mr. Regenstreif are the typical exponents of Arab and Jewish thought on this matter. Only love, patience, and understanding of each other will eventually bring peace and order to that troubled area of the world.

SPERRY

One of the world's smallest watches was recently made for Queen Elizabeth II. The movement measures only 3 mm. by 11 mm. Mighty fine work, you say, but nothing as compared with some of the minute precision gear trains produced by Sperry for certain electro-mechanical mechanisms.

Some of these are so fine that they must be projected in magnified form on screens for examination and checking.

The facilities of this department of the Sperry factory are also available to other firms in Canada who need fine precision gears as component parts of the things they make.

That Toronto had the best team in the Intercollegiate Hockey League was a debatable question until last Friday night's game at Varsity Arena. Then, as we watched the Blue and White mash the Redmen into the soft ice of the Arena, there was no doubt in our minds that the Blues have what Redmen coach Rocky Robillard classed before game time as a "super team."

Balanced Club

This seems to be the most balanced of the three Toronto title clubs, (assuming that this squad wins all the marbles). Last year's leading scorer, Ken Linseman (31 points in 12 games), has seen his point total fall off to six points and his goal production from 18 to two. Thus he now finds himself playing seventh fiddle, as far as point scoring goes, in the Blue production machine. The Torontonians have three lines which share the scoring in every game they play. Should one line have a bad night, then there are two others to take up the slack. Friday night they were all going with the throttle's open.

Against the Redmen the Blues struck like a king cobra, quick, vicious and without any letup. Before the locals knew what had hit them they were down 2-0.

Then the Red and White seemed to be fighting to get out of the dazed atmosphere that prevailed as Blueclad forwards circled around the McGill defencemen as if the rearguards were standing still. Whenever the McGill forwards penetrated into Toronto territory, the Blue defencemen picked off Redmen passes on their sticks and sent Varsity scorers winging away.

The Blues were cautious and teasing as they shot at the McGill nets in the first period. They would pass the puck around, or skate into position unhindered, before daring to shoot at the goal, yet every-time they fired, the red light flashed. The Blues scored on five of their first six shots, the Redmen on two of their first four. Rocky Robillard couldn't exactly pin-point what had happened to the Redmen, or give a reason for their sudden collapse. But he did say that it was the worst game that one of his teams had ever played on Toronto ice.

The game was a hard hitting affair with the Blues throwing their weight around from the opening whistle. But the Redmen met them head on and body checking was perhaps the only portion of the game in which they were not grossly outmatched by the heavier Toronto club. The tribe had been forewarned that the Blues would come out swinging as last week the Varsity crew knocked the U of M Carabins all over the ice while beating them 5-3. The Carabins had five of their players retire from that game with injuries.

Konyk Figured

Friday night's contest saw four players come out as casualties. On the home list Leo 'the Cannon' Konyk suffered a painful shoulder injury and Doug 'Tiger' Maule aggrevated a groin injury. On the other side of the fence Dave Stephen was clipped early and missed the first period. Then in the final period, Dave Jackson, who spent most of the night playing goaler for Ray Dunn, got into the way of 'Tiger' Maule's slap shot. The puck hit the top of Jackson's stick and spun off clipping him on the chin with the force of a Rocky Marciano blockbuster. Jackson flopped to the ice, flipped over and took a ten-count. Ten stitches were required to close the gash.

Konyk's injury, which was diagnosed anywhere from a pulled muscle or ligament to a bruised muscle or bone, caused Rockey Robillard no end to his troubles as he was forced to juggle his already juggled lines. He tried Jack Cheser, Merdy Armstrong, Jack McMullan and defenseman Jimmy Grant on the line with Dick Baltzan and Ross Hughes in an effort to inject some scoring punch into the staggering Redmen, but to no avail. Nevertheless whenever Ross and Dick were on the ice with a linemate, the Redmen had just as much of the play as Toronto.
